

4/11/07

Home > Think Tank > Skoll > Blog

Wednesday, April 11, 2007

MEET THE NEXT GENERATION OF CHANGEMAKERS

Disarming youth soldiers in Africa - Battling blindness in India - Stopping sex slavery in Sri Lanka. Remarkable aims and accomplishments in their own right. Even more remarkable if you consider that these are efforts launched by teens. The power of the millennial generation to change the world was the focus of the Brick Awards last night at the Nokia Theater in New York's Times Square. Founded by Andrew Shue (of Melrose Place and LA Galaxy fame), Do Something hosts these annual awards to showcase the passion and potential of young people. And, I was clearly not the only one moved by these stories - event presenters included Susan Sarandon, Wyclef Jean, and LeAnn Rimes. Get inspired - watch the awards this Thursday, 12 April at 9pm EST on The CW.

posted by Maggie Brenneke @ 10:42 PM

Further Insight

Entrepreneurial Solutions

SustainAbility Team

John Elkington

Sophia Tickell

Maggie Brenneke

Kelly Cruickshank

<http://www.sustainability.com/blogs/skoll/skollblog1.asp?id=914>

Disarming youth soldiers in Africa - Battling blindness in India - Stopping sex slavery in Sri Lanka. Remarkable aims and accomplishments in their own right. Even more remarkable if you consider that these are efforts launched by teens. The power of the millennial generation to change the world was the focus of the Brick Awards last night at the Nokia Theater in New York's Times Square. Founded by Andrew Shue (of Melrose Place and LA Galaxy fame), Do Something hosts these annual awards to showcase the passion and potential of young people. And, I was clearly not the only one moved by these stories - event presenters included Susan Sarandon, Wyclef Jean, and LeAnn Rimes. Get inspired - watch the awards this Thursday, 12 April at 9pm EST on The CW.
posted by Maggie Brenneke @ 10:42 PM