The Allstate Foundation is giving a boost to teens who are trying to persuade peers to drive safely. Teens ages 18 and younger can apply online for $500 grants to fund safe-driving campaigns in their school or community.

They should be prepared to describe a new or existing project, how they would use the money and answer these three questions: What would you say to a friend who is making you nervous by driving recklessly? How would you spend a million dollars to curb teen driving crashes? If you could invent one thing to make cars safer for teens, what would it be?

Apply at www.dosomething.org through May 11.

Seventy Minnesota children and teens between ages 10 and 19 died in car crashes in 2005.
